Affandi

The present lot, titled "Three Stray Dogs," is one of Affandi's exceptional pieces. The inspiration of this work came from his observation of Mr. Jimin, his driver, feeding a pack of stray dogs under a sandalwood tree in Bali. The maestro often sought inspiration for his paintings during his frequent visits to Bali.

The dogs, ravenously devouring the food and fighting each other, intrigued Affandi. He was moved by this scene which reflects how people often act similarly like these dogs, fighting and competing against each other to their own detriment. This natural phenomena of Stray dogs has been a recurring theme in Affandi's works.

Executed in 1965, this work is from the private collection of Alex Papadimitriou. Affandi depicts three dogs, one in shades of black, another in red, and the third in white. The dramatic contrast across the entire canvas intensifies the portrayal of the fighting dogs. The spontaneous and varying intensity of painting using his hand and fingers captures the movement, emotions and intensity of the scene. Affandi's signature symbol of "Sun, Feet and Hands" is drawn at the top left of the work, indicating the Maestro's personal satisfaction toward this particular masterpiece.

In the work titled "Seascape of the Java Sea" the beauty of a lively fisherman village is depicted, with traditional fishing boats of distinctive shapes and colors filling the coast from left to right in red, green, orange, black, and blue. Looking at the beach, you can see people engaged in various activities. On the left, several people can be seen selling fish, a common scene in fisherman villages.

A work portraying his son, Abang Rahino

Maestro S. Sudjojono is a well-known painter for his honesty and sincerity, reflecting colors, shapes, and proportions as he observes them. To truly value his art, we need to grasp his dedication. Since the times of struggle, he boldly portrayed realistic situations or actual conditions in Indonesia using his distinctive impressionist style. When painting an object, Sudjojono always understands the character and momentary characteristics of the object being painted.

In this present lot, S. Sudjojono painted his son, Abang Rahino. Prior to the final exam at grade six elementary school in 1969, Abang Rahino—whose nickname is Rino—studied religion subject. As his father S. Sudjojono saw him, he invited Rino to his studio and painted the present lot within ninety minutes. S. Sudjojono asked Rino to wear his sarong, while the black cap was borrowed from Thamrin Dilapanga, one of their relatives from Manado. S. Sudjojono took the "ngaji" terminology as he thinks it is more precise than the common term "belajar" in Bahasa Indonesia for learning or studying.

This painting shows Rino in a white shirt with a hint of white, grey and blue hue, and black peci (cap), smiling widely while holding a book with both hands. In the background, Sudjojono added trees and plants in dark green and brown shades. Throughout this painting, Sudjojono shows his mastery in his distinctive impressionistic style using spontaneous and bold strokes of paint that form a detailed picture to the eye. Sudjojono also shows his mastery in realistic perception, creating a sense of depth between his subject and its background.

Srihadi Soedarsono

With over five decades of experience in the art world, Srihadi Soedarsono is considered one of the greatest Indonesian painters. As a Javanese, he was educated based on the principles of Central Javanese ethics. His life experiences, including his time at university, have helped him discover his true self as an artist. He began his journey in Solo, where he learned about aristocratic Javanese society. Later, while studying at ITB in Bandung, he was exposed to the western-oriented in education system. His experiences studying in America also helped shape his strong character and broad outlook as an artist.

One of his precious works titled "Bedoyo Ketawang-Energy of Inner Beauty" that portrays the unique beauty of the dance from the Surakarta Palace, which is exclusively performed during special occasions within the palace premises. The three dancers are adorned from head to toe, resembling a princess bride from the palace. They wear a golden bun adorned with white jasmine flowers cascading down to the waist, accompanied by an exquisite copper-colored necklace.

This dance exudes energy, elegance, and authority, skillfully captured and depicted by Srihadi through his brushstrokes and color transitions. The dancers wear black attire with subtle hints of purple and brown. The red shawl that is tied with a golden belt enhances the sense of movement by incorporating strokes that directed our gaze to the dancers' hand.

Lee Man Fong

In this painting, these goldfish aren't just decorative; in Chinese culture, they hold a special symbolism, and a bowl with twelve of them carries a particularly promising meaning. The number twelve resonates deeply in Chinese beliefs. It represents the twelve cyclical animals of the zodiac, each influencing a year in the grand cycle of time. Twelve months make a year, and twelve hours mark the day and night. Goldfish themselves are seen as lucky creatures, representing wealth and prosperity. The fish, with its graceful movements and flowing fins, embodies abundance and vitality.

Having twelve goldfish, then, signifies a wish for overflowing wealth and success throughout the entire year, for each fish to bring its own portion of prosperity. It's a visual reminder to strive for abundance but also to find harmony within that abundance, just as the goldfish gracefully swim in their shared space.

Lee Man Fong has successfully combined the Chinese and Western styles in his art. The majority of his life was spent in Indonesia, where he crafted a distinct artistic style that harmoniously combined diverse influences to form his serene yet fervent artistic perspective. He frequently used Chinese brushwork techniques while applying Western visual conventions to his composition. A prominent painter and curator, his innovative approach introduced the Nanyang style to 20th-century Indonesia. Lee Man Fong's body of work reflects his deep connection to the natural environment, celebrating the wildlife and countryside of Southeast Asia.

In this painting, Lee Man Fong portrays two horses in varying shades of brown. The horse at the forefront is eating the grass while the one behind stands majestically. Additionally, he included a tree with a twisted trunk on the right. Horses have been admired for their strength, beauty, and grace. Moreover in Chinese traditions Horses hold historical importance as it was used in wars, which now translates as a symbol of power and bravery. In Lee Man Fong's oeuvre the 12 Chinese zodiac are often depicted and among the 12 Horses are one of the rarest to be painted.

The present lot is a unique collaborative artwork by S. Sudjojono and Mia Bustam, his first wife. It is a tapestry, an embroidery woven on a fabric. The artwork is titled after the name of the youngest child of S. Sudjojono and Mia Bustam, "Abang Rahino", or also known as Abang Rahina,. This artwork is the only known collaborative work between S. Sudjojono and Mia Bustam. This work was designed by S. Sudjojono, embroidered by Mia Bustam.

S. Sudjojono's design of this work depicts all of their eight children with the imagined Abang Rahino at the center as a boy who appears as if he is over four years old, seated with his back facing the viewer. When S. Sudjojono completed the design in 1956, Mia Bustam started to work on embroidering it, but completed it later in 1984. In 1956, S. Sudjojono had to leave for Jakarta due to his work as a party representative of the Indonesian Communist Party (PKI), leaving little life for his family and Mia Bustam in Yogyakarta. He found life as a politician challenging; a new romance was also starting up with Rosalina (Rose) Wilhelmina Poppeck in Jakarta. It was amidst these intersecting currents in his life entailing that of a politician and a budding romance with Rose that in turn gave rise to a rift with Mia Bustam.

The aspirations and hope of Sudjojono rested on his youngest son, Abang Rahino, who was expected to carry on his ideological vision of a "red dawn" in Indonesia. The figure on the right with a walking stick is his father, Sindudarmo, who was a founding member of the Communist Party of Indonesia, which was established on 23rd May 1920. The red clouds above the mountain and more specifically above Sindudarmo suggest the artist's desire for Abang Rahino to follow his footsteps, fulfilling the aspirations of Sindudarmo for a communist Indonesia; hence a new red dawn. The mountains symbolize the nation in accordance with Javanese beliefs wherein the mountain is the cosmological center in which the spirit dwells. The dove on the left symbolizes the coming peace after Indonesia has become a communist country.

The life of Abang Rahina mirrors the life of Sudjojono in the prime of his career as a politician and intellectual leader of Indonesia artists who had dedicated their art to the nation-building efforts after independence in 1949.

The influence of the Indonesian communists was formidable; by 1956 Sukarno, the president veered increasingly towards the Left. The red dawn appears as a dream that is materializing in Indonesia and Mia Bustam, who was a member of Lembaga Kebudayaan Rakyat (LEKRA), the cultural organization of the communists, would have shared Sudjojono's aspirations for their newborn son.

Abang Rahina can be considered as a tapestry, a form of fabric art prized for its portability by aristocrats in Europe for decorative purposes, and also for symbolising authority; as the coat of arms of a family was frequently Woven as tapestry. The decision to make such a tapestry for Abang Rahino demonstrated the closeness of the family as a potent force for bringing about political and social changes in Indonesia. Abang Rahino, located at the centre of this picture, appears larger than the rest of his siblings, suggesting the high hopes that the couple had for their newly born son (Fig. 2). The disproportionately large size of Abang Rahino contrasts with that of Tedjabayu, the eldest son, who is perched on top of a tortoise that the family kept as a pet. He is depicted urinating on the tortoise as if he was a mischievous child.

Abang Rahina was not completed as its life took an untoward turn when Sudjojono and Mia Bustam divorced in 1959. The psychological trauma of the separation was further exacerbated by Mia Bustam's imprisonment, from 1965 to 1977, for being a member of Lembaga Kebudayaan Rakyat (LEKRA, meaning 'people's culture'). This was a difficult period for the children of Mia Bustam who virtually lost their mother who was incarcerated. They moved from Yogyakarta in order to live with Sudjojono and Rose Pandanwangi's family in Pasar Minggu in the South of Jakarta. Upon her release from prison, Mia Bustam completed Abang Rahina around 1984, two years before Sudjojono died. Sudjojono never lived to see this collaborative work, which had a poem by Khalil Gibran, a Lebanese poet and writer, embroidered on it.

The inclusion of Gibran's poem titled, On Children represents a twist to the life of Abang Rahina because it was not in the original design by Sudjojono. Mia Bustami included this poem as she completed the work, intending it as a message to her eight children, to say that they belonged to God, and not to their parents, and that parents are the bow from which children, like arrows, spring from. The years in prison meant that Mia Bustam was absent during the growing years of her children, who were estranged from their father, for most of their lives. This work may be seen as exemplifying parental bonds; children envisioned as arrows seeking their own respective directions and objectives in life. (by Seng Yu Jin)

Affandi is a name known to both art enthusiasts and those less familiar with the art world, as this Indonesian maestro's impact has reverberated widely. Affandi held solo exhibitions in Indonesia and toured Europe, represented Indonesia in international exhibitions in Brazil and Venice, won first prize at San Paolo, and held a solo exhibition at World House Gallery New York. In addition to his domestic and international exhibitions, Affandi also received the title of Doctor Honoris Causa from the University of Singapore, was honored with the title of Grand Maestro from San Marzano, Florence, Italy, and received other prestigious awards

The pinnacle of Affandi's expressionist achievements is exemplified by his role as a pioneer in action-painting, evident in the highly sensational "Erotic" series. The paintings titled 'Embracing Couple' were created when the maestro was in Thailand. Through these artworks, we can observe the courage to display nudity and intimacy expressed on canvas as fine art, challenging the notion that such subjects are taboo to be displayed in public. Affandi pushes the boundaries of "taboo" in Indonesia, not only through nude paintings like many other artists, but also through intimate activities such as the series depicting two people in the act of making love.

Heri Dono's Important Work: "Angels Caught on the Trap"

The first Flying Angel Installation by Heri Dono

"Angels Caught on the Trap" is a piece created in 1996 and first exhibited that same year at the Sao Paulo Biennale in Brazil. The French artist Gustave Courbet once said, "Show me an angel, I will paint one." In the history of modern Western art, angels have typically been viewed through a religious lens. However, the angels in this work are not associated with specific religious issues because Heri Dono sees angels as symbols of inspiration. This inspiration continuously moves forward, similar to imagination, fantasy, intuition, and human perception.

This work portrays angels captured in nets, symbolizing the prohibitions and censorship imposed by state institutions on matters that opposed the ideology of the New Order government at that time. This situation makes it difficult for the angels, as symbols of inspiration, to break free from their constraints.

"The 25th Episode" is a work by Heri Dono created in 1985 while he was still a student at the Yogyakarta Indonesian Art Institute. Cartoons were not considered part of fine art at that time. He combines the concepts of animation and animism, believing that every object possesses its own spirit. He views comics and cartoons as real entities, similar to animist beliefs. Through this painting, the artist conveys that all objects, visible or invisible, are creatures that exist and can be depicted by an artist. The title "Episode 25" signifies the point in Heri Dono's life, at age 25, when he considered the creatures at the bottom of the deepest ocean or beyond Earth's atmosphere have diverse form.

Anatole Krasnyansky

Born in Kiev Ukraine in 1930, Anatole Krasnyansky, was a prominent architect and watercolorist when he left the U.S.S.R. for the United States in 1975. He found the US fertile ground for his aesthetic growth. Krasnyansky's traditional cityscapes, much admired in Europe, have grown richer, freer and more expressive; and in recent years he has evolved a second, wholly new style with which to render the experience and ideas of his new life in the United States.

Krasnyansky's awareness of the interdependence of architecture, sculptures, painting and applied art, and his knowledge of these diverse disciplines have shaped his career and found expression in his art. Through experimentation Krasnyansky has developed his own artistic method, one that has freed him from the constraints of traditional watercolor techniques.

The artist's innovative inclusion of paper texture into the creative process is a dynamic component of his art, resulting in an expansion of the medium's potential. Krasnyansky is one of the first artists to elevate the watercolor medium to the expressive possibilities usually associated with oil painting.
