LÉA LAFUGIE

Lead only by the power of her artistic skill, her intrepidity and above all her enormous adventure desire, from 1924 till 1955 the French artist Léa Lafugie never stopped to travel and paint in Asia. During that early time of the 20th century, as travel was very hazardous and still quite dangerous in many places, this astonishing lady always seemed to enjoy to give to herself some new challenges. Insatiable and inexhaustible, barely a journey was accomplished that she was already planning for a new one.

"Homecoming tribute - Master Artist Chen Wen Hsi Ink Collection", 6 April - 31 May 2016 at Beyond Colours, Singapore

Provenance:

Acquired directly from the artist

Pick up point: Singapore

A keen observer of nature and an animal lover, his favoured subject matter includes landscapes, figures, birds and animals, still-life studies and abstract compositions. He was proficient in both traditional Chinese ink and Western oil painting and experimented with a variety of styles including Fauvism and Cubism. He found that there was "much to learn from the West, especially on composition, harmony, balance, construction of lines - features which could advantageously supplement the traditional Chinese art." Eschewing mere physical likeness, Chen sought for "the composition, image, and spirit, the overall beauty and cohesion of the painting."

Life in Form

Still life is an academic genre; a form of practice and a practice of form. For Chen, it is obvious that many of the works demonstrate an exercise in creating pictures with paint and pigment, providing the textures of her experience and observations not unlike her representations of landscapes, people and places. For the subject matter, the range of watercolour, oil and printmaking provide an intriguing spectrum of image making and technique that evolves the specific characteristics of her painterly style. Watercolour brings about transparency and contouring, oils offer volume but also plane; print-making creates linear and surface textures made further complex by the behavior of pigment directed through a press.

Chen's understanding of specific mediums is synonymous with her compunction to convey and her ultimate expressiveness. Her narrative is demonstrated in the technique she chooses, while the subjects are a pulse for rhythmic colours and lines, a reflection of those familiar things we find beautiful or easy to observe in life – flowers, vegetables and household objects.

Redfern exhibition opening in London, 1963.

Cheong Soo Pieng (1917-1983), a Chinese-born artist who trained at the Xinhua Academy of Fine Art in Shanghai, is arguably the essential artist of 20th century Singapore. He emigrated to the city state in 1946 and within a few years was renowned as one of the pioneering artists who embodied the principles of Nanyang. A philosophy rather than a simple style, Nanyang painting is named after the Nanyang Academy of Art (NAFA), founded in 1938 by a group of Chinese emigrées who also trained at the Xinhua Academy; like Soo Pieng, they had moved to Singapore to avoid conflicts and deprivation on the mainland. Nanyang painting is a heady mix of Chinese ink painting and European modernism fused with the landscape and forms of the Southern Seas. This conflation of techniques, materials and ways of seeing is still renowned as an expression of Singaporean artistic identity.

Abstraction is a working title for this piece, which was painted in 1963. It is one of a group of 24 oil paintings and 31 watercolours exhibited at the Redfern Gallery, Cork Street, from 23 April to 17 May 1963. Identification of the specific piece is presently underway. The Redfern exhibition was held at the end of a two-year period of travel for Soo Pieng between 1961 and 1963, during which he toured Britain and continental Europe. During his travels he saw Abstract Expressionist works, which since the 1950s had been enormously influential not only in Western nations but also in Southeast Asia. He was also captivated by works by Turner and Constable; this can be seen in Abstraction with the layered abstraction of barely discernible form and the bright point of light, analogous to the sun. The role of this luminescent focal point in the composition recalls the infamous Varnishing Day incident of 1832 when Turner, with typical chutzpah, applied his bright red dot to signify a buoy in his seascape and walked away, leaving Constable methodically applying the finishing touches to his painting hanging alongside. Constable declared, "He has been here, and he has fired a gun".

Soo Pieng also fired a gun in 1963 with this group of works, which stands alone within his highly varied oeuvre in a period that can be regarded as a pivotal point in his career. The abstraction of Abstract Composition is almost complete, but the central motif composed of clouded black layers suggests trees reflected in water. It is a virtuoso mix of the Chinese literati ink painting tradition, which is based upon confident application of shades of black ink, and Abstract Expressionist gestural splashes with a suffusion of colour to provoke a mood of sobriety bordered by optimism. He built upon his experiments with Western modernism that went right back to his art school training in Shanghai but which he had more fully realised during his first field trip to Bali in 1952 with his colleagues from NAFA; this had resulted in an exhibition at the British Council in Singapore in 1953, which made not only his name but also reified the Nanyang identity to a wider public. His later works, while always varied in approach and technique, are more typically associated with linear figurative forms inspired by Balinese modernism of the Batuan school and the Chinese precision brush technique of Gongbi (Lot 712). Examples of this later style can be found in the National Gallery of Singapore and other public collections, as well as being familiar to the local population through the 1978 figurative painting Drying Salted Fish, which is pictured on Singapore's $50 banknote.

This painting is therefore one of a very special group of works. They have gradually come to light on the secondary market over the last 20 years; the record price of HK$4.84 million (US$624,000) was set for the triptych Nature's Inspiration (Redfern No.1) at Christie's Hong Kong on 24 May 2014. Examples are also to be found in the collections of several British institutions: Abstraction II (Redfern No.7, purchased direct from gallery) is in the Glynn Vivian Art Gallery, City & County of Swansea; Chinese Landscape III (Redfern No.15, purchased direct from gallery) at the Leicestershire County Council Collection; and a watercolour on paper, Untitled, at Gracefield Arts Centre, Dundee (Dickie Hewlett Bequest 2011).

A fresh follow up to Cortez's "Open Room" pieces in "Bliss", his latest solo exhibition in London, is "The Royal". Much like the first two iterations of this concept, "The Royal" expands the artist's portfolio of recurring thematic expressions. This time through the use of a bookshelf, a versatile element that gives the viewer room to project new meanings that accompany the lone female figuration on the canvas. Cortez enlivens this take on the concept by injecting color that makes it busier than the works from "Bliss".

The work remains deeply personal as is, in part, an autobiographical expression of Cortez's artistic influences.

A never ending search for ones definition of Truth.

Most of our lives today revolve within a clockwork,
A days beginning is its end. Some may find relief between the lines, some may set sail to seek calmness in the seas. Others may have fulfilment in a glimpse of joy. But Sanity, some may have found it; To others, not at all.
