In Search of Identity: An Introduction to the Collection

By Viv Lawes, UK Consultant, One Larasati Arts

In Search of Identity follows the inaugural and highly successful 2017 auction held by One Larasati Arts in participation with Asian Art in London. Returning to this year's annual festival of Asian art celebrated in London, 2018 sees a boutique collection of works by established and emergent artists practising within Southeast Asia, representing the Philippines, Singapore and Indonesia, as well as Japan.

The collection is focused on the Philippines, geographically one of the strongest performing sectors in the Southeast Asian art market; the world record for a work by a Filipino artist is that set by Juan Luna's España y Filipinas (Spain and Philippines), 1884, in 2013 which sold for HK$25,880,000 (US$3.34 million) at Sotheby's Hong Kong. Now well established in the London art market through representation at auction by One Larasati Arts and exhibitions held by sister company One East Asia, Andres Barrioquinto (b.1975) offers a new work, Lady Love, 2018 (Lot 720). Last year, Larasati's sale at Asian Art in London saw Barrioquinto's Pleasure of Flowers, 2017, set a new artist record outside of the Philippines when it went for £91,500 against an estimate of £20,000-£30,000. His commercial success is matched by his steeply rising institutional profile, with a solo exhibition of portraits opening at the National Museum of the Philippines on 8 November 2018. Lady Love shows the profile of a young woman whose physical structure and surface is formed from coloured and albino peacocks, set against a cave en grisaille where more peacocks appear from the folds of rock. There is a sense of threat that lies beneath the beauty and peaceful expression of the figure. Peacocks have a mixed symbolism in both Eastern and Western cultures. They are often associated with the sun because of the bursting pattern of the tail when fully displayed and because of the birds' strident cry at dawn. They signify beauty and dignity in China, with an association with royalty by the Ming period, while the eyes in the tail are believed to be protective as an icon of watchfulness. Peacocks function as the mounts of several gods in Hinduism and the Buddhist god of healing in Japan. In Christian belief they represent immortality and an antidote to poison and evil. However, the other side is that the eyes represent evil because of the peacock's association in Jewish mythology with the she-devil Lilith. As a result, the superstition in the West that to bring a peacock feather into the home brings bad luck still survives, while peacocks are also associated with pride because of the apparent, and anthropomorphic, vanity of the peacock spreading its tail to attract a mate.

Returning to the London auction scene is Jayson Cortez (b.1986), whose uplifting homage to the power of positive thinking, Garden of Hope, was sold by Larasati in London last year for £6,710 (estimate £3,800-£4,600). Cortez is a figurative artist with deep personal religious convictions steeped in the Catholicism of his native Philippines. An assiduous technician, he has studied the work of consummate draftsmen in the Western tradition, such as Leonardo da Vinci, Rembrandt, Modigliani, Francis Bacon and, more recently, Alexander McQueen. Focusing on the narrative through gesture, his brand of realism is a fusion of hyper-realism and surrealism that references sepia-tinted black and white photography, a nod to the photographs that he uses to work from and subvert in a critique of the interplay of reality and perception. His oil on canvas Si Malakas at Si Maganda (The Strong and the Beautiful), 2018 (Lot 719), is inspired by the Philippine folkloric tale which posits the eponymous characters as the first man and woman on earth. According to the story, all that existed was a parcel of land surrounded by sea and the sky, with a bamboo plant and a bird. The bird heard noises coming from one of the stems of bamboo so pecked it until it split to reveal Malakas and Maganda. They had children and in time their descendants populated the Malay archipelago. The story essentialises the maleness of Malakas with the qualities of strength and durability, while Maganda's femininity comes in the form of softness, sweetness and beauty. Cortez presents them almost androgynously, as equals, their physiques slight and somewhat vulnerable, yet presenting a united front as they stand should-to-shoulder encircled by a crown of pale yellow roses. Behind them an apartment block is rising, a geometric structure girded with scaffolding. The contrast between figure and building may suggest alienation but could equally suggest, through the monochrome palette shared by body and structure, a harmony between nature and artifice, conjoined through the creation of a home.

New to auction in London are Abi Dionisio (b.1987) and Welbart (b.1971). Dionisio is a multidisciplinary artist who uses the visual and conceptual interplay between paint and embroidery in her images of the human form. "The human form is essential to my work because, through it, I am able to express emotions, age, gender, body language and facial expressions. It helps me to compose and create stories." (Interview with the artist, 6 October 2018). She is best known for her paintings of young women, mysteriously half-draped in bride-like attire, as well as for her hand-stitched embroidered portraits, but has recently conflated portrait and embroidery in an approach that she calls the "Other side of beauty." Her method is to take the obverse of the embroideries, itself a corollary and record of the image-making process abstracted from the original form to become the new "face" of the artwork, and layer it in paint. This is then used to create a print onto paper or canvas, which is worked up into the final painted image. Dionisio's Being and Becoming, 2018 (Lot 717) shows a bearded man, his face a mass of stitches and knots that signify the craft behind the art, the graft behind surface appearance that the artist believes is the key to achieving success.

Welbart is known for his figurative works of naked, mannequin-like and masked figures that allude to the psychological barriers and disguises that human beings adopt in daily life. His personal life is the foundation of the emotional and psychological ambiguity found in his dream-like scenes, which frequently depict alienation in an urban setting and the search for unity with others and within one's own soul. Life experience has taught him that only self-respect and the unity of mind, heart and soul can bring happiness; it is this conscious search for the positive that he signifies in his work through the inclusion of text, as seen in Loved, 2017 (Lot 713). "The texts are all positive words. I am a believer in the law of attraction. The energy and the intention you release in the universe will echo back to you. Words are powerful. I want to give the viewer positive energy when they read the words and pick what resonate with them. I know it is kind of literal but I believe that the texts reaffirm the serenity of the face, or the other way around. It is like a halo but more visible." (Interview with the artist, 6 October 2018). He does not always include text in his paintings; in its place is the repeated motif of a globe of bright light – a symbol of hope. Glimpse (To the Past and Future), 2016 (Lot 718) shows a young girl holding the globe with the Dove of Peace flying down to the meditative candles that surround her. This work is about the importance of nurturing the young, surrounding them with love so that they may in turn seek to pursue moral and ethical choices.

A collection of works by Jerry Elizalde Navarro (1924-1999) completes the strong Philippines presence in the auction. Navarro was posthumously declared a National Artist, an elite body of artists in all fields who are considered to have made a significant contribution to the art of the Philippines. The nominations are jointly run by the National Commission for Culture and the Arts and the Cultural Center of the Philippines. Navarro was extremely versatile, working in the fine, graphic and advertising arts through his career. He moved seamlessly between figuration and abstraction. In the 1960s he produced a form of Lyrical Abstraction but the works represented here come from the last decade of his life, when painterly nudes and colour block abstractions were produced alongside each other. The earliest work is The Silver Screen, 1989 (lot 716), an oil on canvas in which paint is applied within crisp blocks of colour that emphasise the graphic nature of the reclining female figure within a flattened interior space. The Heart Rustling of Leaves, 1995 (Lot 714) is a watercolour of pure, brightly coloured geometric abstraction that suggests synesthesia, with the sounds of the rustling leaves coming through as multidirectional forms. The pastel Two Women, 1995 (Lot 715) has an equally expressive fauvist palette with a careful balance of warm and cool tones. The alignment of the two figures in repeated poses recalls the figurative carving on Buddhist and Hindu temples which Navarro would have seen during his long sojourns on the island of Bali.

Bali unites the artists representing Indonesia in the auction, all of whom were born outside the country but spent significant periods of their lives living and working on the island. It is a clear indication not only of the effects of colonialism but also of the spell Bali cast on generations of artists who came to find an escape route from Western industrial society in the 20th century. Rudolf Bonnet (1895-1978), Willem Gerard Hofker (1902-1981) and Arie Smit (1916-2016) all came from the Netherlands, while Donald Friend (1914-1989) was born in Australia. Bonnet and Hofker are both representatives of the Mooi Indies ('Beautiful Indies') style of drawing and painting during the first half of the 20th century. Although sometimes used pejoratively to describe the idealizing and exoticising approach in representing the people and landscapes of Indonesia, the Mooi Indie style is also simply a mark of its times that occurred on the tail end of a century of Orientalism in Western art practice. It is testament to the high quality of Höfker's and Bonnet's works that they are eagerly collected in Southeast Asia.

Bonnet arrived in Bali in 1929 and settled in Ubud, where he helped to establish the Pitamaha Artists' Association in 1936. He spent much of his life on the island, producing dignified and penetrating portraits of local people and figurative scenes throughout his career. Through these works he aimed to preserve and glorify the Balinese, whom he regarded as people that represented a timeless, classical state of being. This affectionate view is beautifully expressed in his charcoal Portrait of a Balinese Boy, 1977 (Lot 704). Hofker settled with his wife in Bali in 1938, joining Bonnet, his lifelong friend. During his six years on the island Hofker produced outstanding figurative works, landscapes and scenes of local life – a subject he regularly revisited after his return to the Netherlands in 1946. His etching Preparation for Mekiis (Lot 701) was produced almost immediately after his relocation to Europe, and shows two young woman getting ready for the Balinese Hindu New Year ceremony. In this purification ritual a mobile temple is carried to a beach where, from the shore, sacred objects associated with the temple are washed in the sea to represent the cleansing of the earth from evil. This purification ritual also sees the local population carry Hindu symbols in the parade to the sea, which Hofker illustrates in the etching. The exoticising Dutch view of Bali in the pre-war period can also be seen in the use of Hofker's artwork for a 1948 advertising poster for the Bali Hotel in Denpasar, designed to attract Western tourists to the island (Lot 702).

Arie Smit first visited Indonesia in 1938, working in Jakarta as a topographic lithographer in the service of the Dutch colonial army. Captured by the Japanese during the occupation of the Dutch East Indies, he spent several years as a prisoner of war in Singapore, Thailand and Burma. He returned to Jakarta at the end of the war and became a citizen in the independent Indonesia in 1950. He worked in publishing while teaching graphics and lithography at the new Bandung Institute of Technology and taught painting privately. He moved permanently to Bali in 1956 and was an integral part of the art scene on the island, providing children with materials in the 1960s and encouraging their natural expressivity. Smit is celebrated as a romantic and lyrical painter whose works evoke a dreamlike state of mind. He always worked slowly, building up paint layers that revealed the underlying colours to form what he called "broken colours" to capture the effect of the equatorial light. The two works included in the auction were made during his final years as a practising artist. Rice Fields and Surrounding Hills, 1993, is rendered in inky shades of blue and green, capturing the lush fertility of Bali's rice terraces, while the night-time view of a village scene revolving around the life of the temple is shown in In the Village of Ubud, 1997. Donald Friend was a contemporary of Smit and spent twenty years living in Bali in the 1960s and '70s. His ink and pen drawing The Tjiktjaks (Lot 703) shows the small lizards, named for their loud call, suspended as if in mid-air as a reference to their lives spent scuttling across ceilings.

Moving from the specificity of the local to the transnationality of the timeless, Singaporean artist Jane Lee's (b.1963) subject matter has a broad international appeal. Addressing universal experiences deeply embedded in her Zen Buddhist beliefs, she looks inwards, referencing the higher self in the sacred space at the centre of the soul. This belongs to God. "All the truth of life is held here; it is the space where the individual can communicate with god through silence, through feeling. To me it's beautiful, it's a true prayer." In Sacred II (Lot 711) Lee shows the vulnerability of the heart, represented by the pink, horizontally scraped ground, which is penetrated by a blood-red channel dug into the paint in a gestural grasp of her hand.

Four lithographs by Takashi Murakami's (b.1962) in his characteristic 'Superflat' style are offered. Produced at Murakami's production and management company in Tokyo, Kaikai Kiki, in editions of 300, Korin: Pure White, 2015 (Lot 710) is a glossy and richly coloured work with trademark faces in the flower centres. Three colourways of the 2006 print And then, and then and then and then (Lots 707, 708, 709) feature the Mr DoB character, the nerdish Otaku alter-ego of Murakami. Mr DoB is inspired by the anime and manga of Japan, with a lineage that comes out of American cultural tropes of Disney figures, specifically Mickey Mouse. The manic, grinning Mr DoB is the most enduring of the characters that Murakami has invented in a practice that blurs the boundaries between high and low art.

Erratically, 'chik-chak', a tiny lizard shouts from the elegant bamboo rafters. He leaps deftly a winged ant. His eyes bulge as he swallows the morsel.

The chik-chak fights to keep his own territory on the ceiling free from intruders of the same species. He scuttles to battle. The vanquished invader falls to the ground.

It is a great disgrace to lose his hold on the ceiling. It means his ancient foe – his conception of cosmic evil I suppose – the force of gravity, has prevailed.

His private territory, a limited antipodes, endows him with a provincial temperament. It's the constant pressure on the brain-pan that does it – living upside-down in a circumscribed area makes him vaingloriously loud-mouthed. But he is a friendly, familiar creature, agile – even athletic – and unceremonious.

'Chik-chak.' Very loud. If a Balinese wishes to be at cockfight he counts from the moment of decision – 'yes, no, yes, no, yes, no' – until the lizard shouts. If it falls on the 'no' he stays home, for it means his luck is out.

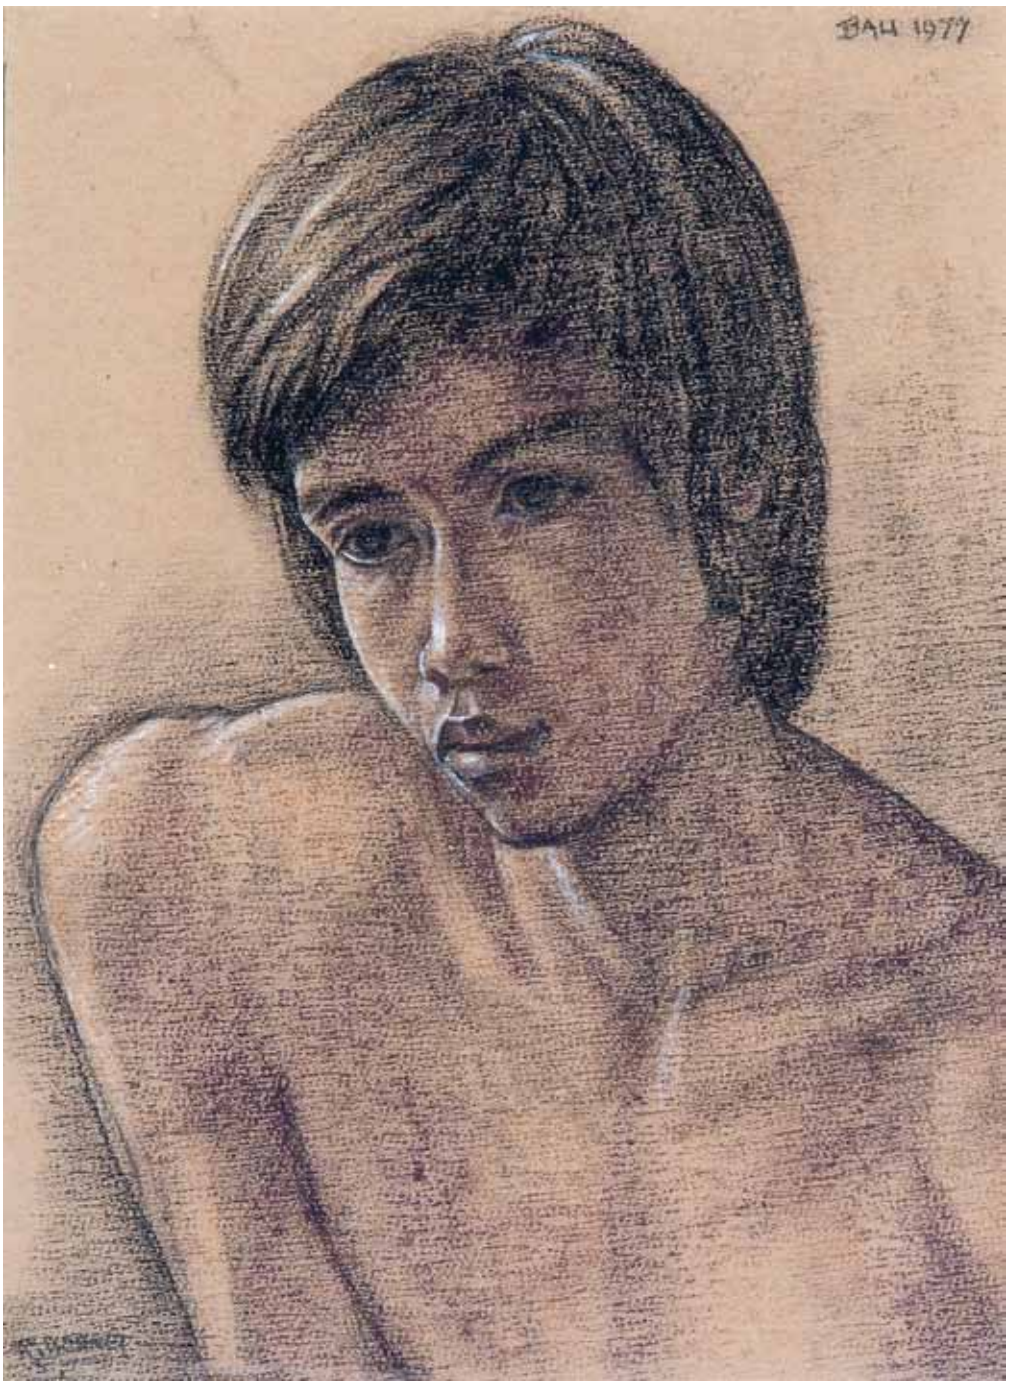

The steeply rising roof above is the colour of old ivory. Bamboo beams are set with elegant precision to hold the close-tied pattern of the thatching that continues beyond the walls to make deep, slanting eaves. The effect of a high aesthetic applied to rusticity. The walls are plaited bamboo, and so are the windows that hinge from the top, propped open by bamboo poles. The floor of terracotta tiles is cool underfoot.

This is the moment of awakening at Tandjung Sari. I would like to prolong the pleasure forever.

It is six in the morning. I can hear the gardener sweeping the path, cackle of geese and ducks, and the quiet chatter of Balinese. Somewhere even at this hour someone is playing a wandering tune on a flute, and there is the sound of the tide on the beach.

It is time to get up. No, yes, no – yes, chik-chak.

The painting is my analogy to success and the underlying reason how one may achieve it. I used the back image of one of my embroidery. The inverted image of a man reveals the complicated work underneath. All the disarray, with the bumps and humps, with the thread ends peeking out here and there, are needed to produce an excellent image on the other side. It requires some strong knots that can not be seen on the outside. This craft needs time, perseverance and skills. Sometimes the stitch you make is not exact to the place where it should be so you have to undo and repeat it again. Success is the result of perfection, hardwork, learning from failure, loyalty and persistence. I believe that the major reason for failure is that one does not understand the meaning of success.

Jose Rizal (Filipino National Hero) once told us that the youth is the hope of the motherland. We believe in that. But it is more appropriate to say that the fate of the world lies in the hands of well informed and well guided children. The future is now. We have to educate our youth. Give them love and virtues. Let us teach them to be responsible. The future depends on what we do today. We are the future because once upon a time, we were the young ones.
